There may be many reasons why you haven't got your ducks in a row.

We can help you make sure you have control and certainty over what will happen to your assets and possessions in the future.

Made simple for you.

Five

great reasons to express your wishes and safeguard your loved ones' futures

Writing and reviewing your will

A professionally drafted, up-to-date will can protect your assets for those you care about and make sure it provides for your loved ones in the way that you want, including appointing guardians for young children.

Arranging a lasting power of attorney (LPA)

If you ever become unable to make your own decisions in the future, no one can automatically step in and act for you. With an LPA, you can give someone you trust, the legal authority to manage your affairs for you, including your day-to-day finances, your investments and any business interests, as well as your health and care needs.

Protecting your property from fraud

Arranging the registration of your property with the Land Registry, if it isn't already, can help protect you against fraud.

Reviewing your accounts, joint assets and digital assets

Making sure your accounts (bank, utilities), joint assets and digital assets (social media and online accounts) are set up in the right way to mitigate any risks now or in the future.

Your funeral wishes and organ donation choices

Discuss your funeral preferences and how best to explain them to your loved-ones as well as make sure you are clear on your options when it comes to organ donation.
